I 次の文章を読み、設問に答えなさい。なお、文章の左にある数字は段落の番号を表しています。
(34点)

- 1 As you may know, Americans have a reputation for consuming lots of food, and not just at home. Restaurants ⁽¹⁾typically serve much larger meals than in most other countries. In fact, ⁽²⁾despite many Americans' big appetites, often they are unable to clean their plates at a restaurant. That's when it's time to request a doggie bag.
- 2 Wait, what do dogs have to do with uneaten food? According to dictionary publisher Merriam-Webster, a doggie bag (or doggy bag) is "a container for leftover* food to be carried home from a meal eaten at a restaurant." But that doesn't answer our question. To find it, we have to go back to World War II. At that time, one way Americans ⁽³⁾dealt with food shortages was to give leftovers from home-cooked meals to their pets. Restaurants later got in on the act by offering takeout boxes so customers could feed uneaten portions to their animal companions, which were in many cases dogs. Some diners then began asking for "doggie bags" to save food for themselves, not their pets. Perhaps they didn't own any, or maybe they just didn't feel like giving them such good eats.
- 3 Traditionalists considered doggie bags as a ⁽⁴⁾crude practice, but some restaurants added a sophisticated touch by shaping the tin foil* covering the leftovers into ⁽⁵⁾decorative designs like swans or seahorses*. Doggie bags designed specifically to carry bottles of wine gave the containers even more charm. However, there are still first-class restaurants that ⁽⁶⁾look down on the use of doggie bags, not just the tacky* name.

- 4 Today, environmentally conscious diners have found further ⁽⁷⁾justification to ask for a doggie bag: food loss. Although food has not been in short supply in the U.S. over the decades since World War II, these restaurant-goers think they can ⁽⁸⁾reduce the environmental impact of farming and ranching by avoiding needless waste. And if you feel hesitant to ask for a “doggie bag” even though you want to save the planet, remember that there are plenty of ⁽⁹⁾alternatives like “to-go box” or “takeout container.”
